Today the Sky Performed

Most days it’s just sun and clouds — nothing special.
But today the sky performed.

Clouds drifted into place.
The sun softened behind a veil of motion.
Light rearranged itself until the ordinary became briefly alive.

Branches blocked the view at first. I almost left.
Then, just as I was pulling away, the shapes aligned — for a few seconds the sky looked back.

Nothing mystical. Nothing forced.

Just light and motion meeting at the right moment — and the simple joy of noticing.
